

Southland Seventh-day Churches to Put Services on Television

Whereas most ministers preach to congregations ranging up to 5000 persons, Southern California Seventh-day ministers may soon be preaching to congregation of over 1,000,000 through a television program being sponsored by the Torrance Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The program, "The Adventist Hour," will have its debut telecast on Sunday, March 27, on KTLA-TV, Channel 5, at 9 a.m.

"This program will bring television cameras into the sanctuaries of Adventist churches throughout Southern California," Pastor Glenn L. Goffar said in announcing the telecast. "Our church is sponsoring this program and we are very much a part of it."

PASTOR GOFFAR said that the program will originate from 14 different Southland Adventist churches during 1960, and that "it will give millions of Southlanders opportunity to evaluate the worship of Seventh-day Adventists."

According to Pastor Goffar television viewers will see all phases of Adventist worship, including a child dedication service, baccalaureate service, camp meeting, and baptism by total immersion during forthcoming telecasts.

"Many Southlanders want to know the religious practice of many different religious communities to examine the worship of at least one church—the Seventh-day Adventists."

"This telecast will give opportunity to examine the worship of at least one church—the Seventh-day Adventists."
